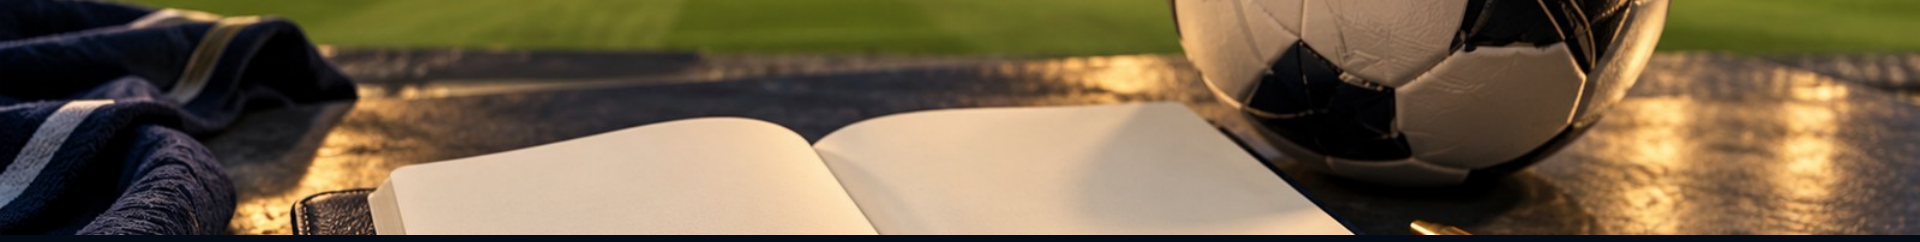
HOW TO READ THE GUIDE

Home team first. All 15 games have the North American date November 7; late-window games are November 8 in Europe. Historical results in the analysis are dated. The gold score panels show editorial forecasts, never completed results.



DECISION DAY BRIEFING

Scheduled windows, playoff context and the research cutoff

EARLY WINDOW	USA: Sat 7 Nov 16:00 EST | 13:00 PST
8 matches	Europe: Sat 7 Nov 22:00 CET | 21:00 GMT

LATE WINDOW	USA: Sat 7 Nov 19:00 EST | 16:00 PST
7 matches	Europe: Sun 8 Nov 01:00 CET | 00:00 GMT

THE FINAL REGULAR-SEASON DAY

All 30 MLS clubs are scheduled to play across 15 matches on Saturday, November 7 in North America. Eight games use the early window, including Montreal hosting Vancouver; seven use the late Western window. Home teams are listed first throughout this guide.

HOW THE SNAPSHOT WORKS

Research was completed October 30, using recorded league results through October 28. LAFC and LA Galaxy last played October 25. A further round on October 31-November 1 can change qualification, seeding, suspensions and rotation. The forecasts are early editorial leans, not final-day clinching calculations.

THE PLAYOFF FRAME

The top nine in each conference qualify. Seeds 1-7 go directly to Round One; seeds 8 and 9 contest a Wild Card match. Wild Cards are November 18, and MLS Cup is December 18. Nashville have already won the Shield; Vancouver's top-seed situation can change before the finale.

WATCHING FROM THE USA OR EUROPE

MLS lists Apple TV coverage. An October 29 announcement also adds free U.S. Tubi simulcasts for Miami-Charlotte and Seattle-LAFC. European viewers should check local Apple TV availability and account terms; the U.S. Tubi announcement does not establish European rights.

Times are scheduled kickoff listings. Confirm late changes in the official match centres.

MONTREAL VS VANCOUVER

USA: SAT 7 NOV 16:00 EST | 13:00 PST
EUROPE: SAT 7 NOV 22:00 CET | 21:00 GMT

FORM SNAPSHOT

Montreal lost 4-0 at Charlotte on October 28, while Vancouver beat San Diego 4-1. Brian White scored his 100th MLS goal in that victory and Thomas Muller returned from injury as a substitute. Those are useful attacking signals for Vancouver; they do not establish who will start the finale.

TACTICAL READ

My tactical preference is for Vancouver to move Montreal laterally before attacking the space beside the centre-backs. Montreal need an outlet beyond the first press; repeatedly surrendering possession near their own penalty area would invite sustained pressure. The hosts can still threaten through an early counter or a set piece, particularly if Vancouver commit both wide defenders.

EDITORIAL LEAN

I lean Vancouver 3-1 because the recent evidence supports more reliable visiting chance creation. The principal uncertainty is rotation: the Western top seed could be settled in the intervening round. Check the November 7 lineup and the home attack before keeping a two-goal margin. This is a projected score, not a report of an already played match.

CHICAGO VS COLUMBUS

USA: SAT 7 NOV 16:00 EST | 13:00 PST
EUROPE: SAT 7 NOV 22:00 CET | 21:00 GMT

FORM SNAPSHOT

Chicago recovered from two goals down to draw 2-2 with Orlando on October 28. Jonathan Bamba and Maren Haile-Selassie supplied the comeback goals. Columbus won 2-0 at Dallas on the same night, with Patrick Schulte making seven saves. Both teams therefore offer reasons for encouragement and reasons to look beyond the final score.

TACTICAL READ

The most interesting contest is the space behind the first midfield line. I expect Chicago to seek wide deliveries and second balls, while Columbus can punish pressure that arrives without cover behind it. The Crew should not need to dominate every phase to create good attacks. Chicago, meanwhile, must avoid assuming that another two-goal deficit can be repaired.

EDITORIAL LEAN

My early forecast is 2-2. Chicago have shown the capacity to recover, but Columbus have enough threat to make a clean home win a demanding call. The draw becomes less attractive if either club enters the final day needing an outright win and leaves large transition spaces late. Reassess the incentives after the preceding round rather than borrowing its clinching scenarios.

D.C. UNITED VS NYCFC

USA: SAT 7 NOV 16:00 EST | 13:00 PST
EUROPE: SAT 7 NOV 22:00 CET | 21:00 GMT

FORM SNAPSHOT

D.C. United lost 2-1 at Toronto on October 28 after scoring first. New York City beat Atlanta 2-1 that night, with substitute Benie Traore deciding the game in stoppage time. The contrast is how the teams finished their most recent recorded matches, not proof that the same late sequence must repeat.

TACTICAL READ

I expect New York City to try to create passing options around the home midfield rather than forcing every move directly towards goal. D.C. can make that plan uncomfortable through aggressive pressure and a quick first pass after regaining possession. For the hosts, the important balance is between getting numbers forward and retaining enough cover to defend the next attack.

EDITORIAL LEAN

NYCFC are my narrow away lean, 2-1. Their latest finish gives them a credible route through a close game, but D.C. scoring first would make this much harder than a simple form comparison suggests. The selection also needs a fresh look if qualification is settled beforehand and either side changes its usual attacking personnel. No November 7 starting lineup is assumed here.

CINCINNATI VS NASHVILLE

USA: SAT 7 NOV 16:00 EST | 13:00 PST
EUROPE: SAT 7 NOV 22:00 CET | 21:00 GMT

FORM SNAPSHOT

Cincinnati drew 2-2 at Miami on October 28, conceding a late equalizer after taking the lead. Nashville drew 0-0 with Philadelphia. At this research snapshot, Nashville have already won the Supporters' Shield and sit on 71 points; their points-record opportunity on Decision Day depends on what happens against New York before then.

TACTICAL READ

For Cincinnati, the route is to keep pressure on Nashville without making every lost ball an open-field race. I expect the visitors to value compact distances and selective forward runs rather than chasing the ball indiscriminately. Cincinnati can make home territory count by sustaining attacks, but crossing from poor positions would allow Nashville to reset and choose their next moment.

EDITORIAL LEAN

Nashville 2-1 is my provisional call, assuming a competitive visiting lineup. The Shield is already secured, so a record chase should not be confused with a guarantee of maximum minutes for every regular. If Nashville rotate heavily or Cincinnati enter with a clear win requirement, the home case strengthens. The forecast rests on control of transitions more than on the league-table headline.

INTER MIAMI VS CHARLOTTE

USA: SAT 7 NOV 16:00 EST | 13:00 PST
EUROPE: SAT 7 NOV 22:00 CET | 21:00 GMT

FORM SNAPSHOT

Miami drew 2-2 with Cincinnati on October 28, rescuing a point through Riquelme Fillipi's late equalizer after Luis Suarez had opened the scoring. Charlotte beat Montreal 4-0, with Liel Abada scoring a second-half hat trick. Both attacks have a recent reason for confidence, but the opponents and match situations were different.

TACTICAL READ

This is my candidate for a game shaped by quick changes of possession. Miami should seek combinations around the penalty area, while Charlotte can threaten the spaces left when the home side build attacks with numbers. The defensive question is not simply which team keeps more possession; it is which team prevents the next pass from releasing a runner towards goal.

EDITORIAL LEAN

I give Miami the home edge, 3-2, while treating Charlotte as a serious scoring threat. A more conservative lineup or reduced minutes for key creators would lower the case for five goals. Confirm availability and final-day incentives before relying on the scoreline. Charlotte's four-goal win is evidence of recent finishing, not a promise that every subsequent attack will be equally efficient.

DIGITAL WORLD PULSE

ORLANDO VS NEW ENGLAND

USA: SAT 7 NOV 16:00 EST | 13:00 PST
EUROPE: SAT 7 NOV 22:00 CET | 21:00 GMT

FORM SNAPSHOT

Orlando drew 2-2 at Chicago on October 28, extending their unbeaten run to five matches. Antoine Griezmann scored and assisted in that game. New England beat Red Bull New York 3-2, with Dor Turgeman scoring twice and Daniel Gazdag supplying the winner. These are two attacks with recent production rather than a simple favorite-versus-underdog pairing.

TACTICAL READ

Orlando need to find their creators between the lines without leaving an unprotected midfield behind the ball. New England have a route through fast forward movement once the first challenge is beaten. I expect the location of turnovers to matter more than long spells of harmless possession. A team that scores should still need to defend the next phase carefully.

EDITORIAL LEAN

My forecast is 2-2. Orlando's attacking momentum makes a home defeat difficult to prefer, but New England's latest win argues against assuming the hosts can dictate every phase. The call is sensitive to the final standings and the availability of the creative players who drive both attacks. Check those after the intervening round; their October 28 performances do not confirm November 7 participation.

PHILADELPHIA VS TORONTO

USA: SAT 7 NOV 16:00 EST | 13:00 PST
EUROPE: SAT 7 NOV 22:00 CET | 21:00 GMT

FORM SNAPSHOT

Philadelphia held Nashville to a 0-0 draw away on October 28. Toronto came from behind to beat D.C. United 2-1, with Jonathan Osorio equalizing and Josh Sargent scoring late. The Union's defensive result and Toronto's recovery point towards a competitive finale rather than an automatic home win.

TACTICAL READ

My preference is for Philadelphia to make the visitors defend repeated entries into the penalty area, while keeping their rest defense organized against Toronto's first forward pass. Toronto can complicate that approach by retaining the ball after regains instead of immediately returning possession. The quality of the second phase after a cross or set piece could decide a game with few clear openings.

EDITORIAL LEAN

Philadelphia 2-1 is the early lean. Home pressure and the recent clean sheet give the Union a workable foundation, but Toronto's latest comeback warns against treating a one-goal lead as secure. Revisit the pick if the final-day stakes create very different rotation choices. The model here is an editorial judgment from the stated evidence, not a statistical probability estimate or a confirmed team selection.

DIGITAL WORLD PULSE

NEW YORK RB VS ATLANTA

USA: SAT 7 NOV 16:00 EST | 13:00 PST
EUROPE: SAT 7 NOV 22:00 CET | 21:00 GMT

FORM SNAPSHOT

Red Bull New York lost 3-2 at New England on October 28 despite scoring twice. Atlanta lost 2-1 at New York City after conceding in stoppage time. Both sides therefore bring a recent defensive concern to this pairing, even though the timing and pattern of those defeats were different.

TACTICAL READ

I expect the home side to look for pressure that creates short attacking distances. That only helps if the lines behind the press move together; Atlanta can punish gaps with an early forward pass. For the visitors, holding the first pass under pressure may matter as much as the run beyond it. Loose exchanges around midfield could make this a more open game than either coach wants.

EDITORIAL LEAN

The home lean is New York RB 2-1. It is a narrow call based on venue and a plausible pressing route, not a claim that Atlanta cannot control the ball. Recheck whether New York still have a qualification target after the preceding round: their October 30 position must not be treated as the final-day scenario. Significant rotation or a more cautious home approach would reduce this advantage.

DIGITAL WORLD PULSE

AUSTIN VS PORTLAND

USA: SAT 7 NOV 19:00 EST | 16:00 PST
EUROPE: SUN 8 NOV 01:00 CET | 00:00 GMT

FORM SNAPSHOT

Austin lost 2-1 at home to Real Salt Lake on October 28. Portland won 3-2 at St. Louis, with Kristoffer Velde scoring twice. That gives the Timbers a recent away attacking reference, while Austin need a better defensive response than the one that allowed Salt Lake to turn the game around.

TACTICAL READ

Austin can improve the matchup by forcing Portland to build through an organized block rather than granting space immediately after turnovers. I expect Portland to seek forward momentum before the home defense is set, with width making the first central opening possible. The visitors must still manage the periods when Austin push them back; another high-scoring away performance would not by itself mean defensive control.

EDITORIAL LEAN

Portland 2-1 is my away selection. The recent win supports the possibility of creating enough chances on the road, but it also included two conceded goals. A compact Austin performance or major changes to Portland's attack could move this towards a draw. Final-day motivation is a condition to verify after the next round, not a substitute for assessing the actual matchup.

DIGITAL WORLD PULSE

DALLAS VS COLORADO

USA: SAT 7 NOV 19:00 EST | 16:00 PST
EUROPE: SUN 8 NOV 01:00 CET | 00:00 GMT

FORM SNAPSHOT

Dallas lost 2-0 to Columbus on October 28, but the visiting goalkeeper's seven saves caution against judging the home attack by that score alone. Colorado drew 2-2 at San Jose, conceding an equalizer after San Jose had been reduced to ten players. Neither result establishes a straightforward favorite for this finale.

TACTICAL READ

My tactical edge is Dallas's ability to make the game territorial at home if their forward pressure is supported. Colorado need a reliable release pass to prevent long defensive spells and can threaten when the home side commit too many players to the first attack. The key is whether Dallas turn pressure into good shooting positions rather than a large number of low-value attempts.

EDITORIAL LEAN

I lean Dallas 2-1, with the home setting breaking a close comparison. Colorado's threat means a clean sheet is difficult to prefer, while Dallas still need to improve the conversion of their openings. Review the penultimate-round results, available forwards and late-game requirements before keeping this call. The recent shot-stopping evidence is a reason for caution, not proof of an expected-goals advantage.

HOUSTON VS ST. LOUIS

USA: SAT 7 NOV 19:00 EST | 16:00 PST
EUROPE: SUN 8 NOV 01:00 CET | 00:00 GMT

FORM SNAPSHOT

Houston won 1-0 at Seattle on October 28 through Lucas Halter's first-half header. Seattle nevertheless produced 21 shots, so the score should not be read as complete Houston control. St. Louis lost 3-2 at home to Portland, showing that they could score while also leaving defensive questions to address.

TACTICAL READ

I expect Houston to value the shape that keeps central passing routes difficult, while looking for chances to attack before the visitors recover their defensive positions. St. Louis can make that plan uncomfortable by recycling the ball and changing the point of attack. The second ball after a clearance is a useful detail to watch: it determines whether pressure ends or begins again.

EDITORIAL LEAN

My early selection is 1-1. Houston's away clean sheet is a positive reference, but repeating the same margin of defensive survival would be risky. St. Louis have a credible scoring route without making an away win the natural choice. A final-day need for victory on either side could make the closing stages more volatile, so reassess the draw once the preceding round is complete.

DIGITAL WORLD PULSE

MINNESOTA VS SAN JOSE

USA: SAT 7 NOV 19:00 EST | 16:00 PST
EUROPE: SUN 8 NOV 01:00 CET | 00:00 GMT

FORM SNAPSHOT

Minnesota beat Sporting Kansas City 3-1 on October 28 after trailing at halftime. San Jose drew 2-2 with Colorado after Timo Werner was sent off, with Jack Jasinski scoring the equalizer. Those recoveries show different routes back into a game; they do not establish identical attacking or defensive strength.

TACTICAL READ

I expect Minnesota to seek quick pressure around the box and make the visitors defend second phases. San Jose need enough composure in the first pass to escape that pressure and attack the space behind it. Their recent ten-man draw is useful evidence of resilience, but the final-day plan should be judged with the actual available personnel rather than with the drama of that result alone.

EDITORIAL LEAN

San Jose 2-1 is a cautious away lean. Minnesota's latest win prevents this from being a comfortable call, especially at home. Check the disciplinary picture after the intervening fixture: an October 28 red card is not sufficient evidence to declare a player either suspended or available on November 7. A reshaped visiting attack would weaken the case for an away win.

SALT LAKE VS LA GALAXY

USA: SAT 7 NOV 19:00 EST | 16:00 PST
EUROPE: SUN 8 NOV 01:00 CET | 00:00 GMT

FORM SNAPSHOT

Real Salt Lake won 2-1 at Austin on October 28, recovering after falling behind. LA Galaxy's latest recorded league game in this guide is the October 25 derby: Joseph Paintsil scored twice before LAFC recovered for a 2-2 draw. Salt Lake's comeback and Galaxy's lost lead are distinct pieces of evidence, not a prediction by themselves.

TACTICAL READ

My preference is for Salt Lake to make home pressure count through controlled support around the ball, rather than allowing every attack to leave space for a Galaxy break. The visitors can change the game with direct running once the home midfield is bypassed. Managing those first few seconds after a turnover should matter more than simply counting how many players each side sends forward.

EDITORIAL LEAN

Salt Lake 2-1 is the home lean. Galaxy have shown enough attacking threat to make a shutout hard to prefer, but their derby lead also illustrates why control after scoring matters. Revisit the call after the intervening round and the final team news. Neither the derby lineup nor Salt Lake's October 28 personnel should be treated as a confirmed selection for this fixture.

SAN DIEGO VS KANSAS CITY

USA: SAT 7 NOV 19:00 EST | 16:00 PST
EUROPE: SUN 8 NOV 01:00 CET | 00:00 GMT

FORM SNAPSHOT

San Diego lost 4-1 at Vancouver on October 28, while Kansas City lost 3-1 at Minnesota after leading at halftime. Both sides therefore need to improve the defensive phases that let their opponents establish control. San Diego's defeat came against the Western leaders at this snapshot, which provides context without erasing the four conceded goals.

TACTICAL READ

I expect San Diego to aim for sustained territory at home, with the challenge being to keep their attacks connected rather than allowing Kansas City a clear release into open space. The visitors can make the game uncomfortable through disciplined positioning and efficient counters. An early home goal would help the forecast, but pushing too many players ahead of the ball would create the wrong type of contest.

EDITORIAL LEAN

San Diego 2-0 is my call, with home control the intended route. The clean-sheet component is the most vulnerable part of the projection after their latest defensive result. Check the final incentives and likely rotation for both teams before keeping it. If the home side look experimental or Kansas City retain a stronger counterattacking threat than expected, reduce confidence in the two-goal margin.

SEATTLE VS LAFC

USA: SAT 7 NOV 19:00 EST | 16:00 PST
EUROPE: SUN 8 NOV 01:00 CET | 00:00 GMT

FORM SNAPSHOT

Seattle lost 1-0 to Houston on October 28 despite 21 shots and 68% possession. LAFC's latest recorded game in this guide is the October 25 derby, when they recovered from two goals down to draw 2-2 with LA Galaxy. Seattle host this Decision Day meeting; the club lists a 4 pm Pacific start at Lumen Field.

TACTICAL READ

The interesting question is whether Seattle can improve the quality of the final action while limiting LAFC's chances to run into space. I expect the visitors to be comfortable attacking selected moments rather than matching every spell of home possession. Seattle need good support behind the ball when an attack ends, because an extra shot is not always worth the counterattack it permits.

EDITORIAL LEAN

I lean 1-1, with both teams having a credible scoring route and reasons to avoid careless exposure. Seattle's shot count makes a repeat blank less attractive, but it does not guarantee a finishing correction. Confirm the final standings, matchday personnel and available attacking combinations before following the draw. This is the late-window closing preview, not a playoff extra-time or penalty-shootout prediction.
