GAME READ

The Colts ended a slide with a 24-22 win over Miami. Houston scored 44 against the Chargers and 24 in a three-point loss at Cleveland. On the season the Texans score 25.9 points per game to the Colts' 20.8, and Indianapolis allows 27.1. That gives Houston a narrow scoring edge. The Texans are 0-4 in games listed at home, so venue alone is a poor reason to back them. The short turnaround favors the team that can sustain drives without relying on a long pass.

WHAT COULD FLIP THE PICK

Indianapolis can flip the pick by finishing its first two trips inside the 20 and forcing Houston to chase in the second half.

GAME READ

Buffalo's 31-12 win at the Jets was its fifth straight. The Bills average 31.9 points a game, almost twice Miami's 16.4. Miami came within two at Indianapolis, but it scored just nine against Detroit the week before. Buffalo can separate if it makes Miami take a long field on most drives, then converts short fields into touchdowns. The Dolphins' best chance is to get a lead early enough to keep the Bills from dictating the pace.

WHAT COULD FLIP THE PICK

An early Buffalo turnover and a Miami touchdown could turn a comfortable projection into a fourth-quarter game.

WINNER LEAN: BILLS

CAR | HOME

Last 5: 2-3 | Latest: W 20-17 at NO

GAME READ

Carolina beat New Orleans 20-17 after scoring 21 in a loss to Denver. Baltimore's last completed game in this snapshot was a 33-10 loss to Jacksonville. Both allow 26.2 points per game, but Carolina has scored 24.3 to Baltimore's 21.0. That supports a slight Panthers lean, tempered by their 1-3 home record. The Ravens play Monday in Week 10, so this projection carries more uncertainty than most. Carolina has a chance to control the second half if it keeps third downs short.

WHAT COULD FLIP THE PICK

Early first downs by Baltimore would change the lean, especially if Carolina falls behind and has to throw more.

CHI | HOME

Last 5: 4-1 | Latest: W 27-24 vs TB (W9)

GAME READ

Chicago won four straight before its bye, capped by a 27-24 win over Tampa Bay. The Saints followed a one-point overtime win against Cleveland with a 20-17 loss to Carolina. The Bears allow 20.4 per game, compared with New Orleans' 26.2. The extra rest matters most if Chicago can build a lead and make the Saints drive the length of the field. New Orleans remains in range if it keeps the game to fewer possessions and avoids giving the Bears short fields.

WHAT COULD FLIP THE PICK

If New Orleans turns its first long drive into seven, Chicago may have to win a more patient game than the projection suggests.

DAL | HOME

Last 5: 2-3 | Latest: L 40-46 vs SF

GAME READ

Dallas put up 40 against San Francisco but still conceded 46. Tennessee scored 23 against Jacksonville and allowed 40. The Cowboys' 28.6 points per game give them the cleaner route to a win, but their defense has allowed 28.2 and the home record is just 1-4. Tennessee needs to make Dallas defend long drives instead of trading quick scores. If the Titans are forced into repeated long third downs, the projected scoring gap becomes harder for them to bridge.

WHAT COULD FLIP THE PICK

The Titans need to stop Dallas from scoring touchdowns on its first two red-zone trips. Two field goals would keep the pace manageable.

GAME READ

Detroit beat New England 35-10 in Munich for its fifth straight win; Jahmyr Gibbs ran for 153 yards in that game. Tampa Bay had a bye after losing 27-24 in Chicago and allows just 19.8 points per game. The Bucs' rest advantage and scoring defense make this more competitive than the records suggest. Detroit's 28.6-point scoring average still gives it the edge if the run game keeps third downs manageable and the Lions make Tampa Bay sustain drives.

WHAT COULD FLIP THE PICK

Tampa Bay can close the gap by holding Detroit to field goals early, then bringing its extra rest into play late.

KC | HOME

GAME READ

Kansas City scored 35 against both the Jets and Falcons in its two most recent games. Arizona scored just nine total against Seattle and the Rams in the same span, and the Chiefs allow 17.3 points per game. The projected gap is driven by field position: Kansas City can force Arizona to take risks if it leads early, while the Cardinals need shorter drives and a reason to keep the clock moving. A fast start for the visitors is crucial to breaking that pattern.

WHAT COULD FLIP THE PICK

Arizona needs an early takeaway and a touchdown from it. A field goal alone may not buy enough time to control the pace.

GAME READ

Pittsburgh lost 38-18 in Cincinnati after winning four straight. Philadelphia lost 19-11 to the Giants before its bye and has dropped seven in a row. That pushes the lean toward Pittsburgh even away from home, but the Steelers can't count on last week's defensive performance to improve by itself. Philadelphia can make this tight with a few sustained drives; averaging 16.4 points per game, it has less margin for an empty red-zone trip than Pittsburgh does.

WHAT COULD FLIP THE PICK

The Eagles have a route to an upset if they win field position and turn two short fields into touchdowns.

GAME READ

The Jets scored 12 in consecutive losses to Kansas City and Buffalo. The Chargers last lost 44-22 to Houston and have the Monday game at Baltimore still to play as of this snapshot. New York has a modest scoring edge on the season, 19.4 to 15.1, but not one that makes a cross-country trip comfortable. The Chargers can undo the projection by protecting the ball and forcing the Jets to finish drives without help from field position.

WHAT COULD FLIP THE PICK

Back-to-back scoring drives by the Chargers would test whether the Jets can get out of their recent offensive rut.

GAME READ

Jacksonville won 33-10 at Baltimore and 40-23 at Tennessee, and its +125 point differential reflects strength on both sides of the ball. The Giants held Philadelphia to 11 before losing 24-21 to Washington. They have enough defense to make the Jaguars earn their points at MetLife. The lean stays with Jacksonville because it scores 29.9 a game and allows 16.0. New York needs to keep the score close enough to dictate pace well into the second half.

WHAT COULD FLIP THE PICK

If the Giants deny touchdowns on Jacksonville's first two good drives, a late possession may decide it.

GAME READ

Denver enters off a bye with five straight wins and a 4-0 home record. Las Vegas has scored 17 and 13 in losses to San Francisco and Seattle, respectively. The Broncos allow 20.7 per game and have the steadier recent form. Their season point differential is only +12, however, so a comfortable win should not be assumed. The Raiders can make this close by forcing several field goals and getting back to their season scoring rate of 25.1.

WHAT COULD FLIP THE PICK

Las Vegas needs to get out of the first quarter without trailing by more than one possession; Denver can then be made to defend a full game.

GAME READ

Minnesota rebounded from a 23-6 loss to Buffalo by beating Green Bay 30-10. San Francisco scored 38 against Las Vegas and 46 at Dallas, but allowed 40 in the latter game. Minnesota's 14.0 points allowed per game is the clearest path to slowing this down; San Francisco's 31.2 scored is the strongest reason to favor the 49ers. The venue is neutral, even with San Francisco listed as the home team. The deciding question is which side can keep the other's red-zone trips to three points.

WHAT COULD FLIP THE PICK

If Minnesota makes San Francisco settle for field goals on two early drives, the Vikings can win without matching its scoring pace.

GAME READ

Cincinnati followed its 34-17 win over Atlanta with a 38-18 win over Pittsburgh, its fifth straight victory. Washington beat the Giants 24-21 on Thursday and has more recovery time before this game. The Bengals average 30.9 points to Washington's 21.8, so the Commanders have more to gain from long drives and limiting possessions. Cincinnati is 4-1 in games listed on the road, but a tight game becomes more plausible if Washington forces it to punt early instead of playing from behind.

WHAT COULD FLIP THE PICK

Keep an eye on Washington's first two possessions. A long touchdown drive and a stop would change the expected tempo.

Three games to watch

One question for each of the best storylines across the week.

01 THE THURSDAY OPENER

Colts at Texans

PAGE 03 >

Thu 19 Nov 20:15 ET / Fri 20 Nov 02:15 CET

Can Indianapolis make the first drives count? Houston scores 5.1 more points per game but has not won a listed home game. The Colts' path is to convert early trips inside the 20 and force the Texans off their preferred pace.

02 THE LATE-WINDOW TEST

Jaguars at Giants

Sun 22 Nov 16:25 ET / Sun 22 Nov 22:25 CET

Can the Giants keep Jacksonville below three touchdowns? The Jaguars arrive with a +125 point differential, but New York held Philadelphia to 11 two weeks ago. Watch whether a short Giants field creates a lead before Jacksonville can stretch the game.

03 THE MEXICO CITY NIGHT GAME

Vikings vs 49ers

Sun 22 Nov 20:20 ET / Mon 23 Nov 02:20 CET

Can Minnesota keep San Francisco out of the end zone twice in a row? The 49ers scored 84 points over their last two games; the Vikings have allowed 14.0 per game this season. The first red-zone series should tell you which team can set the pace.

WHY THE FIRST RED-ZONE DRIVE MATTERS

San Francisco is the designated home team, but this forecast adds no usual home-field edge. A 49ers touchdown on the opening drive would increase the pressure on a Minnesota offense averaging 19.6 points. A field goal instead gives the Vikings time to keep the game patient and play to their defensive strength.
